

LIFE STILL AHEAD

Where people explore what comes next.

How It Started

In April 2025, while waiting at the hospital for her first grandchild's birth, Keryl Oliver wrote a children's book in one sitting, using the pen name Kiki Ollie.

Just two years earlier, she had spent three days beside the man she loved in a cardiac ICU before losing him. The experience dismantled the life she knew and shattered her sense of identity.

Writing that book unexpectedly reawakened something inside her—the desire to create again—and made her wonder: what helps people rebuild after loss or disruption when they don't experience a moment that reignites them?

The Mission

To help people rediscover direction and begin shaping what comes next after profound life change. Delivered through practical tools, workshops, and conversations.

CONNECT • EXPLORE • CREATE

Three core elements are being created:

COMMUNITY

A network of people supporting one another with encouragement, compassion, and gentle accountability.

CONVERSATIONS

Interviews that will become a podcast series exploring how people rebuild life after profound change.

WORKSHOPS

Guided sessions with frameworks and exercises to help participants rediscover direction and possibility.

This work is not about reliving loss or disruption—it is about rebuilding and moving forward.

“Life Still Ahead” is a program being developed by Highly Achievable, Inc.—Coaching Tools and Strategies

Is This Traditional Grief Support?

No.

Many programs focus on helping people process grief. That work is also important.

This approach begins after initial grief support—at the stage when people start asking different questions, such as:

- Who am I now?
- What might I want to build next?
- Where do I begin?

The goal is not to relive the past, but to rediscover possibility and the motivation to move forward.

Life Still Ahead programs help people regain direction, rebuild momentum, and begin shaping what comes next.

What emerges is simple but powerful:
the realization that there is still life ahead.

CERTIFIED COACH
MARKETING EXECUTIVE
SOMEONE WHO UNDERSTANDS

Why Keryl Is Uniquely Positioned

Keryl Oliver brings together three experiences that rarely intersect:

A Builder

For more than thirty years, she helped launch products, campaigns, and organizations, including founding and leading a multimillion-dollar marketing agency.

A Coach

Later in her career she retrained to become a certified coach focused on helping individuals and groups remove obstacles, clarify goals, and build on their strengths.

Someone Who Has Walked This Path

Keryl has personally experienced the kind of loss that can dismantle identity and understands how difficult it can be to rebuild momentum.

Loss does not always mean death.

Major life disruptions that can trigger this moment include:

- Retirement (loss of career)
- Layoff
- Divorce or separation
- Health issues
- Relocation
- Natural disasters
- Loss of youth
- Loss of identity

In each of these moments, people eventually face the same questions:
What does the next chapter look like? How do I begin it?
